Fattening Old Cows.

Old cows can seldom be fattened at a profit, even if their flesh was as valuable as that of younger ones, because if no do it. But their flesh is not equal to that of animals to their prime, so there is a loss, both in the quality and in the cost of producing. When a cow has reached twelve to fourteen years of age, it hardly pays to fatten her, if she could be had for nothing. Some cows of extraordinary quality may be profit the sake either of stock or nilk, but average cows are better converted into the flower of the control of the call them old.
